

Making Waves With Local Fashion: Toyooka's SDGs Handbag Project

In addition to being home to one of Japan's oldest and most picturesque hot spring towns (Kinoshaki Onsen), Toyooka City is also making a name for itself in the realms of fashion and sustainability. As the home to approximately 80 percent of Japan's handbag production while also recently being awarded a spot on the Top 100 Green Destinations List, Toyooka is currently partnering with Alliance For The Blue, a Japan-based organization focusing on ocean waste reduction and recycling.

Through the partnership, beginning on October 1, Toyooka Kaban's artisans have begun to sell a variety of specially-crafted bags created from discarded fishing nets polluting the ocean with a portion of the profits being donated to Alliance For The Blue. Available in deep blue and ocean blue, customers can purchase a bag by visiting one of Toyooka Kaban's vendors, including Toyooka Kaban Artisan Atelier located on the famous Caban Street.

Along with having certified top-quality craftsmanship, an additional plus to these bags is that they are designed with the United Nations' specific SDGs (Sustainable Development Goals) in mind. For Toyooka's citizens, creating products that are in line with the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals is not just viewed as a noteworthy achievement, but as a necessity for the protection of the local environment and future generations.

Approximately 8,000,000 tons of plastic waste enter ocean waters every year, with an estimated 20,000 to 60,000 of those annual tons originating in Japan. According to a survey conducted in 2016 by the Japanese Government's Ministry of the Environment ("Survey of Debris Drifting Ashore at Ten Spots in Japan"), fishing nets and ropes account for anywhere between 20 to 30 percent of all human-produced ocean waste washing up on Japan's shores. To combat these numbers, promoting sustainable fashion and waste upcycling is regarded with the utmost importance for the future development and prosperity of Toyooka's residents.

As one of Toyooka's most popular spots for a hot cup of coffee, Higurashi Coffee imports beans from multiple countries across the world for their variety of blends including Ethiopia, Brazil, and Colombia.
